Market Recap

The November bond market rally (the strongest since 1985) continued in December, driving the 12-month Treasury-bill yield to its lowest level since May. Whereas in November, the rally primarily resulted from an intangible shift in investor sentiment, December gains were fueled by encouraging progress on inflation and a growing sense that the Fed had not only completed its tightening campaign but would soon begin to cut rates.

There were plenty of economy releases to sift through in December, and although most of the data suggested growth was moderating in the final quarter of the year, the overriding theme was that inflation was retreating faster than expected. Fed officials had indicated all year that unemployment would have to rise, and GDP would have to weaken significantly in order to wrangle inflation down to their +2.0% target, but the idea that positive growth could coexist with lower prices became more of a reality as the year drew to a close.

The November CPI numbers were mostly on target. Falling prices at the gas pump contributed to a benign +0.1% rise in the overall number, while persistent housing costs pushed the core rate up +0.3% for the month. On a year-over basis, overall CPI retreated from +3.2% to +3.1%, while core CPI remained at +4.0%. But it was the second-tier inflation data that drew the attention of investors ...and likely Fed officials. The November personal consumption expenditures (PCE) index fell -0.1% and core PCE rose just +0.1%, while the previous month's core reading was revised downward from +0.2% to +0.1%. On a year-over-year basis, the overall PCE price index was increasing at a +2.6% pace, and core PCE at a +3.2% rate. More importantly, over the last six months core PCE was up by just +1.9% on an annualized basis, indicating that the inflation measure preferred by Fed officials seemed to be on target through November. Adding to the positive inflation news was a downward revision to third quarter core PCE from +2.3% to +2.0%.

The FOMC meeting on December 21st turned out to be the most important news event of the month, (possibly the year). Fed officials, as expected, held the overnight target rate steady for the third straight meeting, while the updated dot plot (also no surprise) showed a lower funds rate at the end of next year. At the post-meeting press conference, Chairman Jay Powell began his prepared comments by declaring inflation was still too high and added that the committee was proceeding carefully, which should have signaled a continuation of the Fed's patient, wait-and-see approach. In the Q&A that followed, Powell even mentioned that it was premature to declare victory on inflation, which hinted it was too early to dismiss the idea of rate hikes. But what the markets actually heard, loud and clear, was Powell's admission that the FOMC had discussed the timing of rate cuts. Until this point, rate cuts had not been mentioned at all by policymakers. In fact, the September dot plot had actually indicated one more 25 basis point hike this year, followed by two cuts in 2024. The December dot plot showed (just) three rates cuts next year. If sentiment wasn't so firmly established, investors might have recognized that the rally had already moved beyond Fed forecasts and sold off, but the buying frenzy just accelerated further. By the end of the December, the futures market had priced-in more than six rate cuts for next year, starting at the March FOMC meeting.

Whether Fed officials "proceed carefully" with just three cuts beginning in the second half of the year or follow the market's more aggressive lead, remains to be seen. The next move by committee members will most certainly be a rate cut, the questions are now when will the rate cuts begin? and how low will the Fed go?

When interest rates fall, bond prices and the values of fixed income securities rise. Credit risk is the risk that a company will not be able to pay its debts, including the interest on its bonds. Cash alternatives typically include money market securities and U.S. treasury bills. Investing in such cash alternatives involves inflation risk. U.S. Treasury bills are subject to market risk if sold prior to maturity. Market risk is the possibility that the value, when sold, might be less than the purchase price.

Investing in stock securities involves volatility risk, market risk, business risk, and industry risk. The prices of most stocks fluctuate. Volatility risk is the chance that the value of a stock will fall. Market risk is the chance that the prices of all stocks will fall due to conditions in the economic environment. Business risk is the chance that a specific company's stock will fall because of issues affecting it. Industry risk is the chance that a set of factors particular to an industry group will adversely affect stock prices within the industry.
